Common Style Aluminium Lever Door Lock

Product Introduction

Common Style Aluminium Lever Door Lock which made in good quality aluminium raw material are frequently used for inner doors in commercial settings. They are easier to open than knob locks as they have a large push-down style handle instead of a knob to grasp and turn. Durable Levers can frequently be the target of torque attacks with excessive pressure applied to the handle to try and force the lock. To combat the attacks, some levers are clutch levers meaning if they are forced, they turn instead of applying pressure to the lock. T type Common Style Aluminium Lever Door Locks are classified into two types: backplate lever handles and rises lever handles. Traditional door handles that sit on a backplate is known as lever handles on a backplate. These can have three different functioning mechanisms: a lever lock, a lever bathroom, and a lever latch.

This mechanism, which is frequently paired with a mortice lock, has a keyhole to operate the door handle, offering security and privacy.
